A Dog in War.

The publication of the statement that the Germans are training dogs for war recalls the fact that a soldier of Col. Bowen's regiment, in the Confederate army, had a large dog, which invaria-bly accompanied him on any duty whatever and was as good as a com-panion. The dog was as ardem a rebel as his master, and somehow or other seemed to have a preternaturally quick nose for a bine-coat. When the man was on picket duty his dog was always nosing about some distance in the front, and if there were any Federals within half a mile he would find them out and bark. He never vent-ured to strack them, but, like a cavalryman, took to the rear when an eugagement was in progress; but after the buttle was over he would reappear. The man was finally killed while on the picket line by going to a spring after water in spite of the warnings of the dog, and the men of the regiment tried to keep the animal, but he went away. He had no esprit du corps. His devotion was purely personal to his master. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
